DAYTON, O., Oct. --High school students of Latin who think they're just about getting their fill of "amo, amas, amat" can take heart. Their teachers will be getting some homework of their own to do this week end (Oct. 29-31).

The Ohio Classical Conference, made up of high school Latin teachers as well as Greek and ancient history teachers in both college and high school, will have their annual meeting Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Dayton Biltmore.

About 100 of them from all over the state are expected. They'll be studying such controversial topics as "Classical Languages in the Atomic Age," and "The Unity of Antigone," and "Chorus Venustus Sallustianum Graecarum," and others.

Principal speaker will be Dr. Antony E. Raubitschek of Princeton University's Institute for Advanced Studies. He'll deliver an address on "Perikles" at the annual conference luncheon at noon Friday.

This is the second time in the 37 year history of the OCC that it has met in Dayton. This time, it's at the invitation of the University of Dayton, whose Brother Gerard Sullivan is acting as local chairman.

It looks like a live week end for the dead language.
